Ticket revenues cover only half of Duke's cost

Almost 1,100 persons paid to see ex-Klan leader David Duke speak at the University Center last Wednesday, and according to an ASUM Programming report, 80 percent of the ticket buyers were students.

But while ticket sales brought Programming $1,320 in revenue, it will fork out at least $2,700 for expenses for the speech.

The Programming report on the Duke speech states that 1,093 people bought tickets, 866 being students.

Expenses for the Duke speech include:

- $1,400 for Duke's fee and $683 for his travel.
- An estimated $60 to $1,000 for security. According to Programming Director Rick Ryan, 30 students were hired as Programming security officers, along with nine reserve deputies from the Missoula County Sheriff's Department. Ryan said exact figures for security costs are yet to be compiled.

• $70 in personal expenses for Duke. According to Sue Grebeldinger, Programming's Lectures Coordinator, Programming picked up a $20 hotel bill for Duke and spent $50 to take him to dinner.

The costs for technical services for the show still remain untabulated. Neither Ryan nor Grebeldinger would estimate how much the services—which include the costs of sound and light placement and ballroom rental—would cost.

Vets' problems surfacing

By C. L. GILBERT
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Citing an increasing number of veterans "coming out of their shells," Max Inglett, former director of the American Veterans Movement, said, "We cannot allow the American public to forget the Vietnam experience."

Inglett, a paraplegic, spoke to about 150 people last night in the University Center Ballroom as the kick-off speaker for a week of events titled "The Vietnam Legacy."

Inglett said the Vietnam vets are suffering from many problems which stem from their experiences in Vietnam. He said one thing that vets need now is for "someone to listen, someone to understand."

Inglett himself is also the victim of his experiences in Vietnam. After serving in Vietnam and Cambodia for two years as a combat medic, he returned to the United States. He began suffering from nightmares, flashbacks and amnesia. He said he was absent without leave many times after having a perfect military record and he wouldn't know where he had been.

One day he woke up in an Army hospital, paralyzed from the waist down. He was told he had been shot while robbing a liquor store but he had no recollection of the incident. There were photographs to prove that it was he and he doesn't deny the fact.

"It was me physically," he said.

He told the Army about the problems he had been having but he said they didn't believe him. Finally, after a year and a half of psychiatric evaluation, the Army

Faculty salary issue discussed

By CATHY KRADOLFER
Montana Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA — For the first time in four years, the University of Montana may not have to cut faculty because of legislative appropriations, but salary recommendations may cause "a possibly large number of faculty to leave," UM President Richard Bowers said yesterday.

Enrollment figures revised by the Commissioner of Higher Education's office predict UM will lose 90 students each year of the biennium. Because the amount of money each school receives and the number of faculty each can hire depends on enrollment, Bowers said the revised enrollment will allow UM to remain at a "status quo level — at least on paper."

But Bowers said the possibility of a "status quo" pay increase may be disheartening to a large number of faculty.

The faculty salaries issue was debated at the Joint Appropriations Subcommittee on Education's weekend hearings after the chairman, Rep. Gene Donaldson, R-Helena, said that giving a $3.2 million catch-up to bring faculty salaries to the level of other western schools would be "grossly unfair" to other state employees.

Donaldson is suggesting that the committee appropriate a pool of money to the commissioner's office to be distributed to "critical areas," such as business and engineering, where salaries lag behind those in the private sector and make hiring and retaining faculty difficult. Other faculty would receive the standard pay raise given all state employees and as yet undetermined.

That suggestion brought comments from Sen. Jack Haffey, D-Anaconda, that the Republican proposal to cut $107 million in taxes is forcing the subcommittee to make "unpalatable" decisions.

"I sense a balancing of the budget problem here," Haffey said.

"To do that, I don't want to cause the political scientist at UM not to be competitive in the market place."

But Donaldson said he does not feel it is fair to state employees to give across-the-board increases in faculty when other state employees also probably lag behind their "peers."

"That's just one of the things we give up, I guess, to live in this state," Donaldson said.

Donaldson denied that Republican tax cut proposals had necessitated cuts in the budget. He said he and the other members of the subcommittee had tried "as much as is humanly possible" to divorce themselves from the talk of tax cuts.

Interviews continue

Interviews of the two applicants for Montana Kaimin editor began last night, and will continue tonight with students having a chance to comment. The applicants are Stephanie Hanson and Steven Grayson, both seniors in journalism.

Tonight's meeting begins at 7 in the ASUM conference room.

Constitution not on ballot

The revised edition of the ASUM constitution, long slated for tomorrow's ballot for student approval, will not be on the ballot.

However, students may get a chance to vote on it Spring Quarter.

Several steps required to get the revised constitution on the ballot have not been taken:

- Central Board has not approved it.
- The University of Montana central administration has not approved it.
- the revisions have not been adequately publicized.

A vote to approve and place the revised constitution on the ballot was scheduled for last week's CB meeting, but four members left the meeting at 8 p.m., destroying the two-thirds quorum needed for doing business.

However, had CB approved the revised constitution, it still would not have been on tomorrow's ballot.

CB member Greg Anderson, who helped author the revised constitution, said it was discovered last week that any constitutional changes must be publicized in the Montana Kaimin at least twice a week for two weeks before the day it appears on the ballot.

Anderson said he will try to put the revised constitution before students for approval next quarter in a special election.

Proponents of the revised constitution had wanted it on tomorrow's ballot to capitalize on the turnout for ASUM officer and CB elections. To approve a new constitution, 25 percent of the students must vote and two-thirds of those voting must be in favor.

Proponents have expressed doubt that any election besides an AUSM presidential one could draw the needed percentage of voters. 25 percent of students voted in last year's ASUM elections, the largest student voter turnout in five years.

Write-in candidates hope to add life to 'dull campaign'

By MIKE DENNISON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Editor's note: This is the last article in a four-part series on the candidates for ASUM president and vice president.

Dan O'Fallon is running for ASUM president to pump some life into what he sees as a dull race, and he plans to do the same for student government if he wins.

But winning the election is, at best, a long shot, for O'Fallon's and his running mate Cathie Nelson's names will not be on the ballot. They are write-in candidates, announcing their candidacy just six days ago.

This disadvantage is compounded by the fact that neither candidate can be in Missoula to campaign, as both are interns in Helena.

O'Fallon, junior in political science, is a Senate intern and Nelson, 21, senior in political science, is a legislative intern for the office of the commissioner of higher education.

If nothing else, the candidates hope their last-minute run for ASUM office will spur some interest in student government.

In a telephone interview Sunday, O'Fallon said ASUM suffers from a severe lack of student interest, a malaise he would combat by many people have labeled ASUM as their top priority and forgotten academics. The emphasis (of a student) must be on education.

"People think they have to be a are a student," he said.

And according to O'Fallon, these concerns center on how students' activity fees are spent. O'Fallon called allocation of the $400,000 in student activity fees "the single most important act that ASUM does."

"Everything else is icing on the cake," he said.

And, says O'Fallon, the president's job is to administer how and where that money is spent. O'Fallon, a Central Board member for five quarters—from Spring 1979 to Fall 1980—says he has the experience to do the job.

"I think I can run government well; if I set out to do something I can get it done," he said. "But I won't say I can do miracles. I hate to make stupid promises and not come through on them. I just have ideas."

Included in O'Fallon's ideas are:

- keeping the annual budgeting session in Spring Quarter. Other candidates advocate moving it to Winter Quarter so experienced CB delegates can allocate the $400,000, but O'Fallon said, "It's (budgeting) a process you have to go through to understand."

DAN O'FALLON and CATHIE NELSON

emphasizing that one does not have to be an aspiring politician to get involved.

"You don't have to drop all your classes to be effective in student government," O'Fallon said. "Too professional politician to be in student government... well, they don't." O'Fallon said any student can work on a committee.

"You can associate with the real problems of a student better if you inventories on larger ASUM groups, like Leisure Services or ASUM administration, to determine their needs and how their money is spent. Without close watch, O'Fallon said, these large groups burgeon into bureaucracy.

• possibly cutting budgets of larger groups, to find out where they (the budgets) might be padded. "Being president is a one-year deal, so you won't be around to oversee (these groups') year-to-year budgets," O'Fallon said.

• establishing a consistent ASUM accounting system, to make financial accountability of student groups easier to determine, despite the constant turnover of ASUM accountants.

• maintaining ASUM's legislative efforts during the off-year. Bills ASUM wants to introduce should be drafted, priorities for lobbying outlined and political parties during this time.

• no ASUM control of the Montana Kaimin. "They should have the right to print what they want to, even if they want to slam me all

Here's what you've all been waiting for . . .

Students will face a familiar bill of fare in tomorrow's ASUM election, having been served up selections of candidates who have been around a while.

But the addition of write-in candidates Dan O'Fallon and Cathie Nelson, who also have their ASUM connections, does offer students a better choice than the ones presented on the ballots for the president/vice president posts.

All four sets of candidates — O'Fallon/Nelson, Greg Anderson/Andrew Matosich, Wayne Kimmet/Sue Grebeldinger and Steve Spaulding/Eric Johnson — list impressive qualifications for the positions, including Central Board and ASUM committee experience.

However, O'Fallon and Nelson stand out from the others, for they have tempered their ideas with a realistic attitude. For that reason, they should be elected to ASUM's top offices.

Deciding only last week to run as write-in candidates and having had little time to advertise or campaign, they concede they face an uphill battle. But their absence from this year's campaign arena should not prevent them from winning the offices.

O'Fallon expressed last quarter a certain amount of disenchantment with the Central Board to which he was a delegate and now has some ideas for changing the things that bothered him.

He basically thinks student government should be put in perspective, with the emphasis placed on the "student" portion of the title. He would like more power returned to student committees, which he feels should be staffed almost entirely by non-CB members, so students in general can have more say in how ASUM is run.

Involving more students in ASUM is a good idea — the people in student government often tend to develop a groupie mentality, hanging on year after year after year. A president who could distance himself a bit from the usual groupie ties could give ASUM a better view of what student government should provide for students.

Of course, O'Fallon has his less-than-laudable qualities, as does any candidate. The major problem he would face as president is one he says he could avoid — a possible inability to work well with some people. His past disgruntlement with ASUM has formed a few barriers between him and some people he may be working with.

However, the problems presented by the other candidates are a little greater than that.

• Anderson and Matosich have good ideas for shaping up the ASUM administration, ideas that are — unfortunately — backed with a bit too much enthusiasm. In their zeal to whip ASUM into shape, virtually making it a professional political organization, they could easily alienate others in student government. In addition, they have indicated they may favor trimming the budgets of some smaller groups such as the Student Action Center or the Kyi-Yo Club, which provide the university with much of its diversity.

• Kimmet and Grebeldinger have been through the election mill before, losing in the primaries last year. In their year away from the mainstream of political life, they have developed a more subdued attitude about what they can accomplish, having reflected on their mistakes in last year's campaign. While they have a great deal of ASUM experience, they also have developed close ties to ASUM and its groupies, so little change could be expected in the status quo. However, if you don't want to vote for a write-in longshot, Kimmet and Grebeldinger would be a good alternative because of their sensible approach to what they could accomplish and their past work in student government.

• Spaulding and Johnson have concentrated much of their campaign on one issue — giving students greater control over the way in which their fees are used. The dominant theme of their campaign has been for student rights. Yet Spaulding has been part of the current ASUM administration, which has been characterized by inefficiency in taking advantage of the rights given to students in the university's collective bargaining agreement. This administration has also had problems developing a good working relationship with university administrators and the Board of Regents — a situation which would probably worsen with Spaulding's anti-administration approach to securing student rights.

O'Fallon and Nelson bring good background to their ticket, backgrounds complemented by the legislative experience both are receiving this session. They will know how best to plot strategy for the 1983 session, having seen first-hand the strengths and weaknesses of ASUM's and the university's lobbying efforts.

The initiative they have demonstrated in becoming official write-in candidates shows they are willing to try to change the problems they see in student government.

For their willingness to take on the challenge of running and to address problems with a direct and realistic approach, O'Fallon and Nelson deserve to win.

Support Carl

Editor: I would like to take this opportunity to endorse Carl Burgdorfer for ASUM business manager.

There are three reasons I am endorsing Carl Burgdorfer. First, Carl is experienced in ASUM politics; as a result, he is prepared to work with the professional administrators affiliated with ASUM, namely, the ASUM accountant, the ASUM programming consultant, and the University Center director. Secondly, Carl is well apprised of the building fees bill presently being considered by the Montana State Legislature, and as a consequence, he will be in a knowledgeable position to judge building fee expenditures in terms of their benefit to student interests. Thirdly, Carl is well aware of the diversity of student interests on this campus; and as an officer of Central Board and chairman of Budget and Finance Committee, he will be sensitive to each interest's financial needs and concerns.

In closing, I ask your support for Carl Burgdorfer for ASUM business manager on election day Wednesday, Feb. 25.

Peter Karr
senior, finance

Vote for a team

Editor: As a graduating senior, I feel fantastic about completing my education at the University of Montana. I am especially proud of the students of this campus and glad that I had the opportunity to represent the students as a member of Central Board. For almost a year now I have had the chance to work with some very energetic, dynamic and hard-working students of the board. There were, of course, some not so energetic board members.

From the previous years, it is apparent that in order for Central Board to be effective it is vital to have strong, honest leadership in the offices of ASUM President and Vice President. Greg Anderson and Andrew Matosich have these kind of leadership characteristics. They have been two of the most active, hard-working and all-around excellent Central Board members. I have found them to be very willing to spend a majority of their time representing the best interests of the students on this campus.

In this election it is very important that students vote for a TEAM. We saw major problems between our current President and Vice President who had not spent a great deal of time working together before being elected to ASUM and thus were not prepared to face the offices as a unified team. Greg and Andy have had the opportunity to work together through committees and other Central Board activities. They are a dynamic team!

Finally, I recommend for you to vote for Greg and Andy because they will do everything they can to provide hard working leadership to the students of this campus.

Linda May
Outgoing Central Board member senior, business management/INCO

Excellent choice

Editor: I believe that Greg Anderson and Andy Matosich would be an excellent choice for ASUM president and vice president. I have known Anderson since high school and have long admired his responsible leadership. Anderson is efficient and thorough in anything he undertakes. Such efficiency and thoroughness is especially needed right now since they seemed to be lacking in the Curtis-Lang administration; i.e., faculty evaluations. His partner, Matosich, compliments Anderson's administrative capabilities. Matosich is the goal-setter and enthusiast behind Anderson. Although, he is new to ASUM as a recently appointed CB member, he has already done more work (not surprisingly) than the present ASUM vice president and many of the CB members. The Anderson-Matosich team would be a "team" and by pulling their talents together, they would get student government running again.

I also endorse Carl Burgdorfer as ASUM business manager. Burgdorfer is one of the most active CB members this year. (Contrary to popular belief there are some active CB members.) Burgdorfer has served on the ASUM Budget and Finance Committee and has many times assisted the ASUM business manager in investigating budget requests. This experience is valuable since the business manager's job is complex and takes time to learn the ropes. His opponent is new on the ASUM scene and inexperienced about the office of business manager. This is not to say that being new is necessarily bad, it only becomes bad when an experienced and capable person is not elected merely for the sake of newness.

Vote for Carl

Editor: Carl Burgdorfer has to be the best choice for ASUM business manager. Carl is a senior in business administration and has shown excellent leadership as the chairman of the quite successful students party and as a member of CB. Being a member of the Budget and Finance Committee (of which the business manager chairs), the Teacher Evaluation Committee, and chairman of the Student Union Board, Carl has gained the necessary experience to do a good job of business manager. I believe having a working knowledge of ASUM will enable Carl to do the best job. He's got the leadership, he's got the experience, and he's got my vote.

Expend energy

Editor: To everyone now attending the University of Montana, I offer a point to ponder:

On Feb. 25 we are having university elections to select a new president, vice president and Central Board members. Most of us take this for granted or even consider the whole thing a joke. But, right now, students in Poland are struggling for the right to have a students' union. Think about it! Instead of wasting a possession others envy, expend the energy to vote.

Steve's sincere

Editor: I wish to state my support for Steve Spaulding in the upcoming ASUM presidential election. Steve has gained valuable experience while serving as ASUM business manager and his sincere efforts to expand student participation in university affairs should be commended. I trust that he and his running mate, Eric Johnson, will work hard to improve the good standing achieved by previous student administrations.

Michael Dahlem
ASUM lobbyist

Commendable candidate

Editor: I urge students to vote for Carl Burgdorfer for ASUM Business Manager on February 25.

Carl has been a Central Board member for one year, and has been a responsible servant of student interests. More recently, Carl has been employed by ASUM Legislative Committee as one of our staff. He has done a commendable job as a researcher on several matters of student interest, and has contributed valuable information for our drive to fund the state work-study program. Carl's honesty and ability to good work make him worthy of the business manager's position.

Please remember to vote February 25. Student government can work well for you if you show your concern.

Bill Bronson

Vote for Merle

Unconstitutional

Editor: The current ASUM constitution requires that proposed constitutional amendments be published in the Kaimin at least twice a week during the two weeks before they are put before the student body for a vote.

The proposed new constitution has not been published in the Kaimin and so cannot constitutionally be placed on the ASUM election ballot.

public forum

Spaulding is Curtis' choice

Editor: Well, once again election time is upon us. Tomorrow students will be going to the polls to elect executives and board members of their governing body. ASUM (Associated Students of the University of Montana) is literally a million-dollar-a-year business with over 80 accounts. But, ASUM is more than business; as the representative body of the 8,000 plus students of the university, it makes decisions that affect the lives of not only the students but the entire university and the community at large. Student government has been, especially in the last decade and a half, continually evolving towards greater and greater degrees of responsibility and involvement. One example of this is the very active role ASUM's Legislative Committee and lobbyists have come to play in the Montana legislature.

In short, student politics are a serious and important realm of activity. Many people think otherwise. This is not without good reason. Student government has done much of the aforementioned evolving and has contributed much to the quality of education and thereby to the quality of life in Montana. ASUM has accomplished this almost in spite of itself.

There have been a number of qualified, educated people who have taken ASUM seriously and worked very hard to bring about progress and a higher quality educational experience at the University. These people have been continually encumbered by the less enthused.

Anyone sincerely attempting to bring progress within an institution faces difficulty. ASUM is no exception. Those in the executive positions face a great responsibility compounded by the tremendous inertia inherent in Montana's higher education system. For this reason, they need to be very dedicated, hard working, and have a high degree of perseverance. They also need the help of an active, intelligent Central Board.

Having dedicated the last year to ASUM, I think it is important, now that I will be stepping aside, to endorse for election those individuals whom I believe to be best qualified. Those elected must continue the struggle toward that goal envisioned by the University's founders and articulated by them when they established the motto of the University: Lux et Veritas—Light and Truth.

Because of their depth of experience, ability to communicate with a broad range of people, and their combination of talents, Steve Spaulding and Eric Johnson are the best choices to serve the students as president/vice president for the coming year.

For the Central Board positions, I endorse the University Party. Were they to be elected en bloc, I believe the result would be the best Central Board we have seen for a long time.

I feel the students, the university, and the state would be best served by electing the above people. I wish the greatest success to whomever is elected.

Sincerely,
David Curtis

Globetrotters dribbling here tonight

The basketball wizardry of the Harlem Globetrotters invades Missoula tonight when the world-renowned team brings its 1981 tour to Dahlberg Arena for a single game.

The game gets under way at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are priced at $6.50 and $5.50 for reserved seating and $4.50 for general admission. There is a $2 discount for University of Montana students and children 12 years old and younger.

Tickets are available at Eli's Records and Tapes, the Photo Factory in the Southgate Mall, Grizzly Grocery and the UM Field House ticket office.

This year, the Globetrotters will play before nearly three million people around the world. No sports team in history has played more games than the Trotters—they play about 400 games a year and are in their second century of existence.

The Globetrotters will play a team that travels with them on their tour.

Charlie, as the tramp, falls in love with a blind flower girl (Virginia Cherrill) who mistakes him for a rich man, and he promises to pay for her expensive eye operation. He tries being a street sweeper, a boxer—anything to get the needed money—and eventually succeeds by sheer accident! City Lights (1931) is a beautifully expressive film (made several years after the advent of talkies but using only pantomime, musical accompaniment, and sound effects), that alternates feelings of melancholy with uproarious slapstick sequences. Some of the funniest scenes occur between Charlie and a millionaire drunkard (Harry Myers), a pal who is extravagantly generous when drunk but who fails even to recognize his friend when sober! Manhattan (1979) is a romantic, witty, and intelligent film that explores the difficulty of sustaining relationships amid the myriad distractions and easy seductions of the age. Woody, as Isaac Davis, is the successful writer of a tv show who has quit his job to write a book on "Decaying Values" and who travels back and forth among his second wife (Meryl Streep) who has left him for a woman, Diane Keaton, his best friend's love; and Mariel Hemingway, a seventeen-year-old who's convinced she's in love with him. The soundtrack features the music of George Gershwin, and was shot in courageous black-and-white by cinematographer Gordon Willis against changing backgrounds of the Manhattan that Allen loves so well. Anybody who doesn't see the relationship of the closing scenes in these two films deserves never to find the prize in the crackerjack box! Both films in 35mm.

Faculty . . .

"My concern is that we come to the (House Appropriations) Committee and the rest of the Legislature with the best possible budget for the university system and that it's a budget they'll be willing to put money into," he said.

Howard Reinhardt, president of the University Teachers' Union, said Donaldson and the subcommittee face a "difficult political decision" in trying to decide whether to give faculty an increase. He said there is "ample justification" for giving an increase, but that the committee must still decide whether it can afford it.

John Richardson, commissioner of higher education, said he is disappointed that "our most critical area, faculty salaries" may not receive the peer catch-up. However, he said there is little or no support from the Legislature and none from the governor's office for the across-the-board increase, while there is legislative support for increases in the "critical" areas of instruction.

"It's a question of what's going to get through the whole process," Richardson said.

Faculty salaries and approval of enrollment estimates are the two issues left to be decided by the subcommittee. Donaldson hopes to finish those when the committee meets this morning.

At Saturday's hearing, the subcommittee went through a long list of "modified" requests, including a master of social work program at UM, and by 3-3 party line votes rejected all the requests. The speed with which the committee acted on the requests prompted Haffey to comment that the subcommittee was practicing "efficient, quick decision-making . . . Cut. Slash. Chop."

over the front page," O'Fallon said.

• fostering a cooperative attitude between the ASUM administration and CB. If they do not work together, nothing will be accomplished, O'Fallon said. He added that he expects disagreement on issues, "But we should be able to respect each other when we're done yelling at each other."

Nelson also said all ASUM committees must be filled by midterm week, Spring Quarter, so members will be experienced by fall. Committees that oversee large groups, like the Legal Services Committee, are then better equipped to examine those groups' budgets. Nelson also is an ex-CB delegate, having served a 1979-80 term.

Although Nelson's job requires her to work until April 18, she said she would fill the committees while she works in Helena.

"O'Fallon would do the legwork," in Missoula, she said.

Both candidates also said they have viewed UM from many angles — as UM delegates, CB members, Nelson as a Greek (Kappa Alpha Theta sorority), and from the Legislature — angles which give them a broad knowledge of the university.

O'Fallon also was one of 76 students nationwide last year to win a $20,000 Harry S Truman scholarship.

As for campaigning, O'Fallon said a few of his friends in Missoula may put up posters or hand out "write-in stickers" carrying O'Fallon's and Nelson's names to stick on the ballot, but O'Fallon had been mulling over the decision of whether to run for several weeks. He said when he heard that apathy was the prevailing sentiment concerning the elections, he decided to toss his hat in the ring.

"I would enjoy winning," says O'Fallon, "but I'm certainly not going to be crushed if I lose."

Vets . . .

decided that he was telling the truth and that his injury was "a direct result of his experiences in Vietnam."

The Army Psychiatric Evaluation Board recommended that Inglett receive 100 percent disability benefits but Inglett said that the Veterans Administration, which handles such claims, wouldn't recognize "post-Vietnam syndrome" and denied him any benefits.

Inglett said he thought the action was taken because "the V.A. didn't want to open up a whole can of worms relating to veterans psychological problems."

One reason Vietnam vets are not treated well, according to Inglett, is that they were involved in a losing effort.

"America needs heroes," he said, "but it also needs victory."

He said the vets from World War II and Korea were treated like heroes because they had fought successfully.

"You cannot treat losers like heroes and I had been a loser," Inglett said.

Corrections

It was incorrectly reported in Friday's Montana Kaimin that students must possess a meal pass to vote for on-campus candidates for Central Board.

Regardless of where they live, students may choose any one ballot—on-campus, organized off-campus, unorganized off-campus or married student housing—and vote only for candidates on that ballot.

And, another thing: don't forget to vote!

The Kaimin also incorrectly reported Friday that Carl Burgdorfer, ASUM business manager candidate, is a member of the Building Fees Committee. Burgdorfer is a member of the ASUM Budget and Finance Committee.
